Overview

Everyone wants to make sure that their staff can work as efficiently as possible, so how do you design an agile working environment that will make a difference?

We have selected some of the best consultants and speakers to guide you through the key stages to ensure your project will achieve optimum success. This seminar identifies key areas that should be considered in advance of any office design project. These areas will help you to create an environment where employees can flourish and achieve their full potential, benefiting themselves and your organisation.

Jamesina Sainsbury
Managing Partner at Veldhoen & Company

Jamesina specialises in working with senior leadership to define their visions for a better future. She will give an overview of activity based working, and explain how collaboration, unity and involvement will enable your business to push boundaries, and open it up to the possibilities of the future.

Paul Montgomery
Partner at Cushman & Wakefield

Paul has over 30 years of experience in the London construction market, helping companies to develop fantastic workplaces. He has an in-depth knowledge of the construction industry, cost, strategic planning and procurement and is well placed to guide you through the office relocation process, offering advice, and highlighting the potential pitfalls.

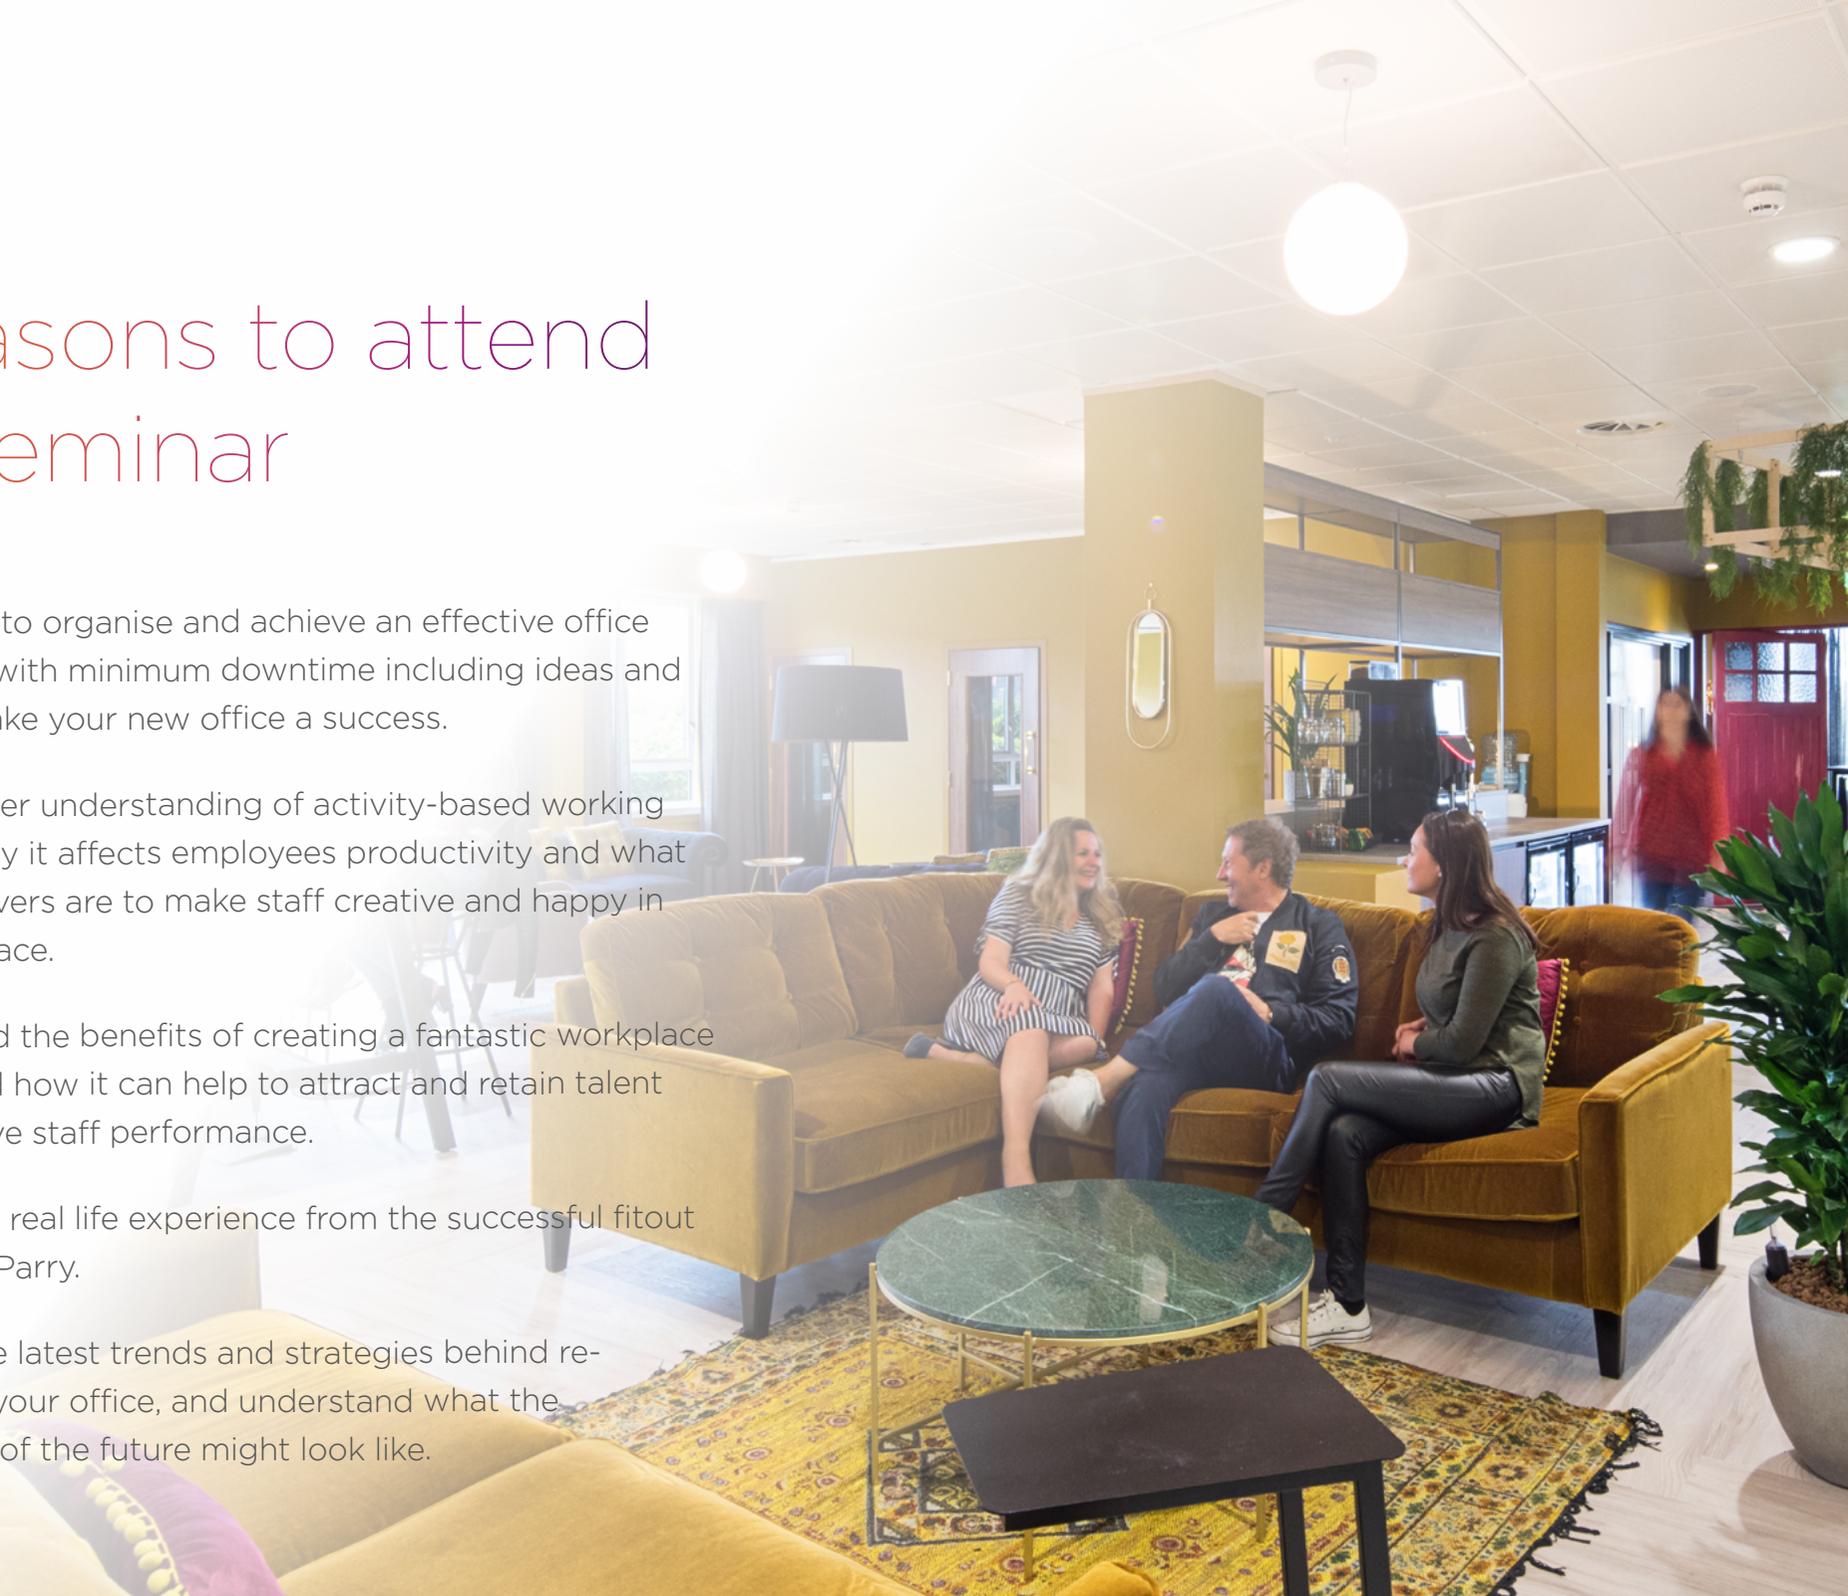

Claire Stant
Designer Director at Office Principles

Claire has over 10 year experience in designing human-centric workplaces for leading brands and will cover her top 10 strategies for creating an optimum workplace for the future. She will discuss how your company culture and the workplace are intrinsically linked and tell us about the offices that she has designed for Cooper Parry, and the way that they are using the workspace as a canvas to create a fantastic company culture.
