A relocation is a unique and often ‘once in a generation’ catalyst to re-imagine what a great workplace might look like with an opportunity to better support your people and increase their productivity and well-being. Forward-thinking organisations are approaching their property strategy with a view to driving better performance, becoming the employer of choice, and increasing profits.

Cyril Parsons
Director at Office Principles

Smartworking and productivity

Cyril will help you to understand what Smart working is and the way it can increase workplace productivity. He will cover the top workplace trends that will increase the productivity of your staff and help you to understand what the workplace will look like in the future. Organisations all over the UK who have implemented ‘Smart Working’ are seeing a positive impact on employee engagement, productivity and their bottom line.

Ros Lambert Porter

Ros will cover the importance of designing for good acoustics in offices with an emphasis on wellbeing and will look at some of the significant research regarding the impact of acoustics on staff performance. She will discuss how we have evolved to process sound, why we react negatively to certain sounds and what it is about the sounds in our workplace that impact on concentration and productivity.

Jo Jenkinson

Creating a high-performance workplace

Jo will explain what agile working means and why, if you apply the concept properly, you will have happier people, see reduced levels of absenteeism, lower operational costs, more efficient use of your entire property estate and, crucially, increased productivity.
